

I am a member of the 96% of the American people who are opposed to the further consolidation of the media. What is most distressing to me is the lack of opportunity the public has had to express our viewpoint. You see, most of us do not have the money to send FCC members on expensive trips. We can't even send ourselves on one. The media are in place for the public, not vice versa. The well being of a democracy lies in its diversity, and the media needs to reflect it.
